 The first thing I saw when I came out of the house was a large crowd of people gathered in front of the door. They were all looking at me with great interest and curiosity. Some of them were pointing their fingers at me and talking to each other. I felt very nervous and shy at first, but as they began to speak to me, I realized that they were all friendly and kind. They told me that they had heard about my return from the city and were glad to see me again. They also asked me many questions about my trip and what I had seen and done there. I answered them as best I could, trying to tell them everything that had happened to me since I left home. As the day went on, more and more people came to see me, and the crowd grew larger and larger. I stayed outside until late in the evening, talking to everyone who wanted to talk to me. It was a very pleasant surprise and a very happy occasion for me.
